West African sources of health and mortality information : a comparative review

In addition to reporting 5×5 km estimates, we also aggregated results obtained from these estimates into three different levels-national, and subnational administrative levels 1 and 2-to provide the full range of geospatial resolution that local, national, and global decision makers might require. The efficacy of existing interventions to prevent or treat diarrheal diseases and to thereby reduce diarrhea mortality has been proved.

Diarrheal Diseases

Pixels coloured blue exceeded the annualised rate of decline between 2000 and 2015, whereas pixels coloured green to yellow had a slower rate of annualised decline during this time. We have used two different approaches to estimate the numbers and proportions of diarrhea deaths for Sub-Saharan Africa in the year 2000: calculation of simple medians for each African subregion and extrapolation from the regression of medians of diarrhea proportional mortality against time.
