Thus the U.S.A. in effect invaded Korea in September 1945 on the plea of accepting the surrender of the Japanese forces south of the 38th parallel. By militarily intervening and forcing a division of Korea, the U.S.A. tried to abort Korea's liberation processes initiated by patriotic, democratic, pro-Socialist forces whose mass base, impeccable record of struggle and sacrifice, passion for radical social and economic transformation, and zealous commitment for national independence were beyond doubt. This was reflected in the emergence, appeal, and programmes of the CPK, the people's committees, and the Korean People's Republic. The fact that needs to be stressed is precisely the fact that U.S. Military Occupation Government knew well and sought to counter, viz. that "the vast majority of the Korean people demonstrably desired not only immediate independence for a United Korea but also radical social and political policies".<sup>23</sup>
