¶ 1025 Between 1995 and the spring of 1998, Knoedler sold three other works that Rosales had supplied, including a purported Franz Kline and a purported Mark Rothko. In addition, Hammer and Andrade argue that they did not conspire to violate the RICO statute, and Hammer argues that he caused Plaintiffs no injury. Freedman explained that a private Swiss collector had owned the work, and that his family wanted to remain anonymous.

By 1859, when Knoedler moved up Broadway across from Grace Church, he was selling Barbizon School landscapes to a new generation of mansion dwellers. Freedman says Andrade told her that Rosales had art to bring in.
