Local Council Resources

There are two brand new case studies and the booklet gives simplified explanations about the role and work of local councils and their councillors, explains the electoral process and provides a number of case studies highlighting the work of a selection of local councils. Australian and state government corporate services In 2012—13 and 2013—14, external consultants published Benchmarking of Commonwealth and State Government corporate services reports. Figure 3D shows that only one of the five audited councils—Bayside—reported similar corporate services expenditure for VGC and our survey.

The Best Value Principles were added to the Act in 1999 to replace the requirement for compulsory competitive tendering for local government services. ERP systems allow a high degree of automation and consistency in customer data. We made nine recommendations in total—four for all Victorian councils and five for DELWP.

Local School Councils (LSCs)

Smaller councils can develop simple yet useful tools to enable them to plan for better service delivery.

Transfer by a local council

If improved, the data could enable councils to meaningfully compare costs and track performance over time. Inconsistencies in VGC data detract from what could otherwise be a useful source of benchmarking material.

Council resources and templates

Councils advised us that this shift often requires them to integrate the different back-office software systems and databases they hold to ensure a seamless 'front end' experience for the customer. Although reporting is mandatory, we found that the audited councils do not report on these principles in a meaningful way.
