And if art, like dreams, uses a language of image and metaphor in which anything can be made to stand for anything, no reliable mediation may ever be achieved between life and art.

Elaine Stritch

Still, Silver argues, her face and her name were associated with fear long before and long after Albee titled his play. CUNNINGHAM Michael, The Hours, London: Fourth Estate, 1999. And in her presentations of sexuality, she has gone far beyond the conventional conceptions of both the sexual and the emotional life.
