INDIA AGRICULTURE AND CLIMATE DATA SET

India is ranked under the world's five largest producers of over 80% of agricultural produce items, including many such as and , in 2010. Rice productivity in India was less than half that of China. Source: National Atlas of India, vol.

4.10 AGRICULTURAL

As with rice, the lasting benefits of improved seeds and improved farming technologies now largely depends on whether India develops infrastructure such as irrigation network, flood control systems, reliable electricity production capacity, all-season rural and urban highways, cold storage to prevent spoilage, modern retail, and competitive buyers of produce from Indian farmers. Over the course of the project, various errors were discovered in the original data set and corrected for.

Farmers' Protest

The Seeds Control Order, 1983 regulates the licenses to sell, export and import seeds. The Food and Agricultural Organisation FAO of the United Nations defines food security as a situation where all people have, at all times, physical and economic access to sufficient, safe and nutritious food that meets the dietary needs and food preferences for a healthy and active life.

Commodity

The state of led India's and earned the distinction of being the country's breadbasket. It recommended that the Reserve Bank of India should issue guidelines to banks, to give loans to farmers against these certificates. In other words, the terms of trade were purposively kept unfavourable for the agricultural sector.
