The seizure of Austria demonstrated once again Hitler's aggressive territorial ambitions, and, once again, the failure of the British and the French to take action against him for violating the Versailles Treaty.

Anschluss

The Waldheim affair started the first serious discussions about Austria's past and the Anschluss. The sentiment was implemented initially most harshly in Austria when between 1938-1939 the Nazis arrested around 2,000 Gypsy men who were sent to and 1,000 Gypsy women who were sent to.
