Both types have a cream-coloured body, the distinguishing feature being the colour of the external roof, and the type of service that the colour denotes: green is like regular with fixed number, route, schedule and fare but generally not fixed stops ; red is a shared taxi, operating on semi-fixed route unregulated, with the driver waiting for enough passengers to justify leaving, as his income depends on the revenue. In many US cities e. In , syndicates include GPRTU and PROTOA.
