German coal miners undergo elaborate training programs to qualify for technical work positions and for upward mobility within the coal mining industry. Coal miners in these countries have extensive training requirements. The Federal Mine Safety and Health Amendments Act of 1977 requires the Secretary of Labor to promulgate mandatory training standards for safety and health training of mines within 180 days of the effective date of P.

Technical services to assist operators in complying with the regulations are provided both by the inspectorate and the operator-funded mining research and testing centers located in each region. The training regulations and training plans identify separate procedures for training new miners, foreign immigrants, inexperienced miners, experienced miners with over 6-months interruption on their regular jobs and young miners. However, an increase in roof fall fatalities in underground coal mines during the last half of calendar 1979 caused concern and prompted MSHA to redouble its roof control efforts in cooperation with industry.
