Forty years' familiar letters of James W. Alexander, D. D., constituting, with the notes, a memoir of his life. Edited by the surviving correspondent, John Hall ...

When they return at midnight, mad with liquor, who shall protect those wives and little ones from their unreasoning frenzy? Next morning a tabernacle was built in the street, just in front of the house, and was occupied for the double purpose of watching and prayer, through the day ; but before the night the sheriff closed the saloon, and the proprietor surrendered ; thus ended the third week. I repeat it, we are sufferers from the law.

Humour and History

Secondly, upon a yet more mournful reason for that fact. I long almost to fainting to have you with me in these sweet places.

I stuck it for a term. What if he has got something like this? It had been proposed, therefore, and warmly urged, that Mr Gilbert should be associated with him in this undertaking, where the fine air and neighbourhood seemed to promise all he required in that respect. Blind's idea was that the extra baby should occupy the floor of the perambulator.

Autobiography of Mrs Gilbert

She belonged to a committee for the management of a Free Library, and her diary shows her invariable attendance. Yet good may be done to mankind beyond the individual case.
