Elsewhere, throughout much of the provinces of Agrigento, Enna, Caltanissetta and Trapani, a great deal of the land is under cultivation, and the precious woodlands are protected by wire fences. The Saracens established dozens of towns and re-populated Palermo, and the population of Sicily probably doubled during two centuries of Arab rule. Certain archaeological discoveries in Sicily reflect an Egyptian artistic influence --not surprising since the Phoenicians often called at Egyptian ports.

» 398-396 BC - Another war of some Greek cities against Carthaginians. All these facts help to explain how and why Sicily came to be a point of convergence between North and South, East and West, between Europe and Africa, but also between the Latin West and the Byzantine East. In 1262, Sicilian locals rose up against the government in the War of the Sicilian Vespers which lasted until 1302.
