Proportional representation: what would it look like?

With one, you help elect a local MP as we do today. The total number of seats available, I would suggest, is an arbitrary number ... maybe something very practical like how many can comfortably sit in the House of Commons.

Proportional representation: what would it look like?

This process continues until a sufficient number of candidates are elected. They are simply distributed based on who is contributing the most value to the Canadian federal pocketbook.

Proportional representation: what would it look like?

Of the countries listed here, Canada is 5 behind only Norway, Iceland, Sweden and New Zealand. Deane Crabb is Secretary of the Electoral Reform Society of South Australia.

Alternative Voting AV is like STV in that it uses ranked allots, but unlike STV it does not produce proportional representation. A friend tells me that intra-party competition - candidates of the same party competing in the same election such s happens under STV - tends to work against extremist candidates who have to face off against other extremists.

Another is like the Maori electorate elections but held at-large with no districts, sort of a top-up of Indigenous seats. So there could be a psychological disadvantage to being an extremist in an STV election. Miss Spence would however find it disappointing that neither the South Australian House of Assembly nor the Australian House of Representatives is elected by proportional representation.

While proportional representation was introduced in Tasmania, this was not accepted for South Australia. He has been involved in various activities aimed at securing the adoption of the quota-preferential method of proportional representation for the election of representative bodies. Suppose you want to support particular candidates from different parties — and want to rank Penny Wong, Sarah Hanson-Young and Jacqui Lambie ahead of all the other candidates.

. FPTP also discriminates against small or alternative local parties that receive very little presence in parliament because they do not win any ridings, despite receiving a modest proportion of the popular vote. She was one of the speakers at a Proportional Representation Congress held as part of the Chicago World Fair, held in August 1893.
