Social Deviance in the Media

. In terms of crime and deviance, labelling theory argues that most people commit deviant and criminal acts but only some are caught and stigmatised for it.

Social Deviance in the Media

One strand of research focuses on the audiences and how they interact with media; the other strand of research focuses on those who produce the media, particularly the news. The family training has not been effective upon him. On average, around 30% of newspaper content is dedicated to crime, however it can be debated whether this news is true because the media exaggerate the truth in order to publish a newsworthy story.
