The Cambridge History of China, Vol. 9: The Ch'ing Dynasty, Part 1: To 1800

It is said to have been in three chapters by HTS, by Ch'ung-wen tsung-mu, and by Chih-chai shu-lu chieh-t'i, in two chapters by Yü hai citing Ch'ung-wen tsung-mu and WHTK, and in a single chapter by both recensions the Yuan-chou and Ch'u-chou versions of Chün-chai tu-shu chih. The other was to exonerate the incumbent leaders by blaming the objective circumstances. This administration, which was a sort of microcosm of the central government, was designed primarily to train and accustom the future emperor to the routines and procedures of his future role.

Yet another Wei shu in 100 chapters was written by Chang Ta-su, who was a compiler in the Historiographical Office during the 650s, and presumably wrote his book as a result of his dissatisfaction with the existing histories. They became a burden when their number increased out of proportion to the food supply. The actual compilers were Wei Ao, Li Hsiin, Chiang Chieh, Chang Yen-yuan, and Ts'ui Yuan, who were ordered to divide the period between them and continue the record to the end of Hsien-tsung's reign.

It is difficult to express my gratitude toward him.

Su Tung

The existence of such an Inner Palace Diary, though not its name, is confirmed by the biography of Li Ch'eng-ch'i, prince of Ning, in the Chiu Tang shu. Two months later the emperor was dead, almost certainly poisoned by elixirs containing massive doses of mercuric salts compounded by an alchemist called Liu Pi. Its personnel held no established ranks and all were concurrently employed in other posts.

Kuo Tzu

They do this not because they are intentionally mendacious, but only because they wish to give an empty reputation to those from whom they once received favors. On May 5, Mao and Chu Te, representing the soviet government and the Red Army respectively, issued the Circular telegram on ceasefire and peace negotiation to unite in resistance to Japan to the Military Commission of the Nanking government.
