In other words, it is the society which influences the mental and moral development of the individual and it is the individual who in return seeks to conform his actions to the moral standards of his social group. Sociology, therefore, can understand social life as a whole by taking help from other social sciences which study exclusively one or the other aspects of human activity.

This theory thus recognizes the importance of human. In most businesses, to be successful at our job, we need to depend on others.

Sociology I: The Study of Human Relationships

The scope of Sociology is much wider than that of Political Science. Anthropology has been divided into three divisions: i Physical anthropology which deals with bodily characteristics of early man and our primitive contemporaries, ii Cultural Anthropology which investigates the cultural remains of early man and of the living cultures of some of the primitive contemporaries, iii Social Anthropology which deals with the institutions and human relationships of primitive, of the past and present. This phenomenon is called the Coined during the 1920s during a series of experiments where workers had higher productivity because they were being watched by researchers and felt cared about.

Sociology: HUMAN RELATIONS THEORY

Ethical decision making is necessary because ethical decisions must be made all the time in our personal and work lives. History is the record of the life of societies of men, of the changes which the societies have gone through, of the ideas which have determined the actions of these societies and of the material conditions which have helped or hindered their development.

Relation of Sociology with Other Social Sciences

They found that regardless of changes such as heat, lighting, hours, and breaks, productivity levels increased during the study. Sociology has been aptly compared to the science of mechanics which considers masses of matter and properties of matter in mass, and Social Psychology to Molecular Physics which deals with molecules and their invocation in view of the fact that Sociology studies the organisation of social groups, their central values and the various forms of institutional behaviour arising on account of them and Social Psychology is concerned with the individuals as members of the group. Upon further examination, we might find that Kathy is having childcare issues because of her divorce.

Learning how to work through these challenges can help us become better at human relations. The study examines the theories of human services and the potential challenges and issues related with the human services. All employees should be treated equally.

Sociology: HUMAN RELATIONS THEORY

As a matter of fact, the various social sciences, as we shall study below, are very much dependent on Sociology for the simple reason that no aspect of human life can be detached from its social aspect. It studies its political and legal problems, family organisation, religion, art, industries and occupations etc. If people are not able to get along and resolve conflicts, the organization as a whole will be less productive, which could affect profitability.
