The incredible years parenting program for foster carers and biological parents of children in foster care: A mixed methods study

Studies show that children adopted from overseas orphanages revealed developmental delays in 50 to 90 percent at initial evaluation with significant proportion in multiple areas such as language and motor skills. Allowances are set at local level and vary widely across the UK, and according to the age and needs of a child, but in England, Northern Ireland and Wales, foster carers should receive at least the national minimum rates.

Why Endings Matter in Foster Care Placements. By Jim Rose

Several children did not feel at home in their foster placement. Research shows that placement instability reduces for older teenagers, perhaps because, given their age, placements for older teenagers are not planned to last as long. The presence of resilient and thoughtful adults, able to build and sustain relationships in complex and testing circumstances would seem to offer the best hope for working through difficult times and providing the essential continuity and stability to come through crises.
