20th CENTURY: China: 1945

Although not much historical information is present, it does give a first hand account as to the situation in China at the time. According to Neo-Confucians, institutions of governance operate on two levels simultaneously, one socio-political and the other personal. Once transformed, ritual propriety and shame, rather than direct concern with benefit, will guide them.

Confucianism

Most notable among these was Liang Shuming, who published Dongxiwenhua jichizhexue The Oriental and Occidental Cultures and Their Philosophies in 1922.

China remains a vulnerable nation surrounded by powerful rivals and potential foes.

China's Foreign Policy

Wu saw Confucianism, Daoism and Chan Buddhism as the main currents in Chinese philosophy. Although fighting was soon resumed, Marshall continued his efforts to bring the two sides together. This practice quickly fell apart, though, and in its supposed place arose the mechanisms of hereditary monarchy MC 5A:5 and 5A:6.
