Paul Pry: a comedy in three acts., by John Poole

Who would have suffered, had the package reached its destination—and who is the better or the happier for the discovery in question? Loftus, the coach proprietor of Newcastle, that a practice had obtained of sending dead bodies through Newcastle to Edinburgh, he determined to stop the first packet of a doubtful nature that should come under his observation. Johncock used every effort to relieve her own daughter, but could not remove the clothes, which were torn off by another woman who came in, when it was found that the child was much burnt.
