The Case of the Black

Evidence points to Diana Regis.

Perry Mason : The Case of the Black

I enjoy the main, recurring characters, and I love any book with a courtroom scene. And Carl Fretch, the caddish step-son, who's main object in life is to make every dame bend to his will and who comes as baggage with Jason's second wife. Worth reading only for the descriptions of California in the 40's---Raymond Chandler-lite.

The case of the black

In the process, Tony strikes her, giving her the titular black eye. I liked how in the beginning of the book, it provides some sort of a table of contents that listed all its characters with their brief introduction and placed the page where they would first show up. Not a great book, but still fun.

Perry Mason : The Case of the Black

Mildred shares an apartment with -- you guessed it -- Diana Regis.

The Case of the Black

When a beautiful blonde lady with a black eye comes to Mason for help saying she was beaten by her employer's stepson it sets in motion a whole train of events leading to murder and kidnap. The assault occurred after a dinner date with Fretch went bad and he made her find her own way back.
