CPGB: History of the Communist Party of Great Britain

A vote at the central committee with a one-vote majority led to nine expulsions from the party of those opposed to the Livingstone decision for factionalism, and some subsequent resignations, including nine members of the central committee. Readers of Jackson's wonderful early memoirs, Solo Trumpet, will discover that its unpublished sequel, Interim Report, shows many of the constraints and evasions that historical writing about the CPGB itself usually involved. At the same time, the slogan officially favoured is of the sort likely to appeal to the sentimental anarchists and general strike fanatics, who fondly hug the delusion that the operations of Governments enjoying the political support of the major portion of the workers can be seriously hampered by attempts at minority mass action.

ResoluteReader: Hugo Dewar

According to Stephen Howe Woddiss was the first open communist in 1961 on the central council of the Movement for Colonial Freedom; and from 1965 until his death in 1980 he was also a member of the CPGB's executive and political committees, as head of the party's international department.

Rajani Palme Dutt: 'Leninism', the CPGB and the imperialist war

New York: Columbia University Press, 1959. To chair a conference where all can talk and nearly all wish to, where tension is strong, and issues are straight, is a test to try even a nimble-witted laddie like McManus, but he survived the ordeal, and will chair a bigger, where issues will be still further narrowed to immediate questions of life and death import.

Far

Harry Pollitt, Johnny Campbell and Bill Rust were all frighteningly close to the terror. That is very important for our present tactical line. Trade unionists in the party in 1968 included John Tocher, George Wake, Dick Etheridge and Cyril Morton AEU ; , Arthur True and Sammy Moore NUM ; UCATT and Max Morris NUT.

Notable Individuals of the Communist Party of Great Britain

Obviously if the Party is to undertake an internal transformation at the moment it has to conduct a political manoeuvre it must retain unity. The Allied victory in the war left the CPGB in its strongest position, with two MPs.
