Faces of the Victorian underworld: They're the first criminal mugshots, taken 150 years ago

Although London criminals were often well-armed, usually their weapons were restricted to knives, life-preservers, and similar items.

Rumours were soon doing the rounds that a number died from alcohol poisoning after gleefully drinking from the sea of beer that covered the streets. THE BEGGAR William Flint was a professional beggar and an Army deserter. Policemen could only stand in awe of the occupations and illegal practices which grew up.
