Matilda (film)

When he felt he needed a booster dose six months later, they turned to an underground provider closer by, in the States. I knew I had to get her to engage, which over the course of seven hours involved recognizing that I hated myself, that my self-hatred was my best and most reliable friend, and that my self-hatred would never die until I appreciated how it had protected me; when I did, and it did, I gave it a Viking funeral in the vision and in reality cried harder than I ever had in my life.

Mary Corey

That killing would serve as a lesson, they said, to any other Indian who might have been thinking about obstructing the white people's passage through native lands.
