Key Consumer Opportunity

1. The consumer is the winner & is part of the solution: TOMS puts the consumer in focus & makes the consumer the hero for buying a pair of shoes. TOMS simple idea makes you feel like you are helping children instantly.

2. Enabling people to live the cause and take part: TOMS does a great job of deeply involving people in the cause. Friends of TOMS is a non-profit that is integrated into the overall TOMS website. Friends of TOMS coordinates volunteer experiences around TOMS "Shoe Drops". If you want to organize your own shoe drop within your organization, Friends of TOMS can help you there as well.

3. TOMS Customer Story: This is just a guess, but TOMS seems to have done a pretty good job at selling their story with key customers. For a social start-up, they seem to have relatively strong distribution after only a couple of years in market (the first line of shoes apparently started shipping in 2007). All too often we forget how important the customer story is...it seems like TOMS found a way to convince retailers on the proposition and I am guessing that this has been critical to their success.

4. Strong online WOM and community: TOMS has an active online community and they do a good job in participating actively in key online social channels. Their blog is regularly updated as well.
