CABINET RESPONSIBILITY. (Hansard, 8 February 1932)

Nehru, Autobiography New edition , pp. The limpid and vivid prose style is one of its great attractio.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS. (Hansard, 22 February 1938)

Their principle, their rule of action, was to say what they meant and to mean what they said, and their effort was always to express in perfectly plain English what both had equally in his own mind; and when they said, as they did say in that treaty t h a t the ships of all nations shall have free passage on equal terms through the canal without any discrimination whatever, they thought they were using plain English. In this the law-maldng body is also the constitution amending body. What my argument is leading to is this, that no business is ever possible on the lines which I have just been describing.
