Sector knowledge: Public Archaeology

The technical sessions were under the below themes.

Who Owns The Past?

Ottawa: Minister of Supply and Services Canada. There was a special discussion with site experts to enhance knowledge throughout these visits. Though I agree largely with Skeates on a number of things namely that archaeologists are increasingly forced to accept and use their political power and be wary of their position in inter national political debates and that everyone is entitled to their opinion on archaeological remains and archaeologists can greatly benefit from listening to them, I disagree that the expertise and elitist position of archaeologists on archaeological remains should be questions within the field of archaeology and outside of that.
