A treatise on the law relating to injunctions : Joyce, Howard C., 1871

Although many called for a regulatory body which would set standards for river purity, pressure from the industrial lobby led to the abandonment of this proposal, in favour of one which would only require industrialists to use the best practicable means. § 13104 - EPA as administrator is given the authority to provide grants to the States to promote source reduction by businesses. The regulatory machinery tended to remain fragmented and weak, and inspectors generally preferred a policy of persuasion to prosecution.

A treatise on the law relating to injunctions : Joyce, Howard C., 1871

Policymakers rather worked on the assumption that technical solutions would be developed for the problem of pollution, which would be adopted by polluters, who would be threatened with prosecution under the legislation only as a last resort.

Indeed, that it was drafted in such a way as to allow public authorities to hinder the more effective remedies against polluters which were available at common law.

Pollution Prevention Law and Policies

As will be seen, the regime created in 1876 and maintained thereafter was not premised on a policy requiring polluters to reach a fixed standard and prosecuting them when they failed. McLaren's own view that the common law was not particularly effective has in turn been challenged by Ben Pontin, that injunctions obtained by private law litigants could play a crucial role in forcing recalcitrant local authorities to spend money to improve sewage facilities. An 1882 advertisement for the work is.
