I am a Christian because the Christian life is an adventure, a romance, and a mystery, all at the same time. Contrary to the sense of the Bible and the intention of the holy Fathers, if I am not mistaken, they would extend such authorities until even in purely physical matters — where faith is not involved — they would have us altogether abandon reason and the evidence of our senses in favor of some biblical passage, though under the surface meaning of its words this passage may contain a different sense. In apologetics, as in all communication, it is critical to answer the question: Who is my audience? The authors wrote to different audiences for different reasons.

The Gap Theory

I am a Christian because the overarching story of purpose and redemption and the ethical vision for love, service, justice is compelling. The rest of Genesis then explains how the Earth became illuminated with light, shaped into continents and oceans, and filled with plants and animals, over the course of six days from its initial state of dark, formless and empty. .

The Gap Theory

And we do not need such compromise. I cannot imagine a God who rewards and punishes the objects of his creation, or who has a will of the kind we experience in ourselves.
