However, as Executive Director Anna Tibajuka of UN-Habitat states, these few positive attributes do not in any way justify the continued existence of slums and should not be an excuse for the slow progress towards the goal of adequate shelter for all. The report presents information, analyses, and conclusions.

Loans were repaid and no property has been taken away, presenting a win-win situation. The report also contains a list of criteria used nationally to distinguish urban areas from rural areas. In the next thirty years, this figure is projected to double to almost 2 billion, unless substantial policy changes are put in place.

UN-Habitat estimates that 924 million people worldwide, or 31. The Global Report on Human Settlements is the most authoritative and up-to-date assessment of conditions and trends in the world's cities. According to the report, housing conditions in most developing countries have become worse in the past ten years due to rapid population growth, to rates of migration from rural to urban places, and to the decline of the rate of increase in national output.
