Family Driven Care 101

Research on School-Based Health Centers and Other Extended Services Since school-based health centers and other extended services are a relatively new phenomenon, research on and evaluation of these programs are in the early stages.

Promising Practices in Systems of Care

Lunch Plenary: × Dee Jones is the Executive Director of the North Carolina State Health Plan, which provides health care coverage to more than 725,000 teachers, state employees, retirees and their dependents. She is also conducting research on adaptation approaches to sea level rise in Florida and developing work on climate resilience planning in the Caribbean.

Applying User Input to the Design and Testing of an Electronic Behavioral Health Information System for Wraparound Care Coordination

She joined ADPH in January 2011, and served as Assistant State Health Officer for Disease Control and Prevention and State Epidemiologist before taking her current position. Most SBHCs also provide health education and health promotion in the clinic, the classroom, for staff, and even for the community.

The Research & Training Center for Children's Mental Health

Preconference: × Gary Cohen has been a pioneer in the environmental health movement for thirty years. The foodservice operation in many schools is responding to community needs, forging new partnerships, and generating new revenue by providing services for populations outside the school.
