Efforts to intensify these restrictions may well be resisted by allied countries who regard them as harmful to their own economic interests. They are likely not only to reject such an approach but to complain of interference in their internal affairs. How revolutionary leadership in both processes can be developed, and how to handle the contradictions between them, are questions that require deeper summation and analysis than we have been able to do here.

As Munich showed, a powerful and aggressive nation with a fanatic belief in its manifest destiny will regard each victory, each extension of its power and authority, as a prelude to the next step.

Foreign Relations of the United States, 1952

MSA has been charged with persuading Europeans to increase their productivity, to develop their economic and military strength, and to integrate their economies. Conclusion: the Americans will not respond to an all-out countervalue attack, and therefore it should be launched without delay.
