Special studies will include low-cost technology options, water quality control at source, health impact studies, studies examining the inclusion of poor families, janjati, dalits and gender aspects in the delivery of water supply and sanitation services, measuring changes in overall community development, health hygiene and sanitation practices, participation of school management committees and the students themselves in school health, hygiene, and sanitation related matters. The overall experience of the past national sanitation programs offer several lessons. The first component supports the building of institutional capacity for implementing, managing and sustaining project activities.
