Given the Greek fleet's unpreparedness resulting from the premature outbreak of the war, such an early Ottoman attack might well have been able to achieve a crucial victory.

New Party (Greece, 1873)

Trikoupis and Deligiannis dominated Greek politics in the later 19th century, alternating in office. Part of this was due to the unpopularity of the King George II in Greece itself, but despite efforts by Greek politicians, British support ensured his retention at the head of the Cairo government. Why did Trikoupis want 2-party domination? The facts that George was young, utterly non-Greek, inexperienced, and apparently rather vain, probably all were considered advantageous.
