Goffman's Legacy

Identity is performed through roles. Other similarities include engaging in the suspense the speaker is attempting to create. As an example, Goffman gives a night club, where with the development of the night activity audience is being involved into it gradually.

When we feel joy, we feel ourselves to be at the maximum of our power of action; we feel that we have fulfilled one of our abilities. The empirical study of social interaction is one of the subjects of microsociology, which concerns the nature of everyday human social interactions and agency on a small scale. How people participate in a front stage performance can be highly intentional and purposeful, or it can be habitual or subconscious.
