China's Economic Choices

I am sure there will be some searching on the value of globalization in the post analysis of this crisis. That approach assumes that countries have the same access to foreign knowledge and the appropriate incentives and institutions in place, or at least can introduce the policies to do so.

In China, 80 million may already be out of work. 9 million more will soon be competing for jobs, too

We might be better focusing on the potential of service sector industries, such as education. Overall, government policies moved away from a direct role in promoting specific industries towards a more facilitating role that promoted innovation and efficiency, encouraged a high degree of contestability and sustained a strong external focus.

China's Economic Growth Now Depends on the West

It is NOT a great idea to be partnering with China for critical supply chain goods and items as US found out during this pandemic. But tariffs have undoubtedly contributed to slower growth since the early months of 2018, when the economic standoff began, experts on the Chinese economy say.

Here's how China is going green

However, in recent years, there have been concerns the rapid rate of growth in China is beginning to slow down and over the next few years, economic challenges could lead to a slowdown and even recession.

Problems of Chinese Economic Growth

A rapidly ageing population means its demographics are becoming increasingly unfavourable, and China has reached the limits of its traditional reliance on investment and exports to fuel rapid economic growth. In Japan, identical technology was imported to foster competition between local private corporations. These two factors are expected to have short-term impacts on the economy, causing severe problems for its macro-management in 2020.
