He is a bonny lad, As you must understand; It's he can dance on deck, And you'll see him dance on land. Norris, at the Looking-glass on London-bridge.

A new ballad, to the tune of, Good people give ear, while a story I tell, of twenty black tradesmen were brought up in Hell, &c or, Packington's Pound (1683 edition)

Mill, and Spileman's Mill ; the one a Water JNill, and the other a Fuller's Mill, both held by the Keeper of London Bridge. And when that bright day faded, And the sun was going down, There was a merry piper Approached from the town: He pulled out his pipe and tabor, So sweetly he did play, Which made all lay down their rakes, And leave off making hay.

Broadside Ballad Index

The track is defined at its onset by some grungy guitar clodding, which not much later, is joined by a triumphant, yet suspiciously distant trumpet playing across the horizon. There is this song by Kelly Lee Owens, yada yada yada.

Chronicles Of London Bridge, by Richard Thomson—a Project Gutenberg eBook.

{41} Next comes a skipper bold, He'll do his part right weel - A clever blade I'm told As ever pozed a keel. This Ferry was rented of the City, by one John Overs, which he enjoyed for many years together, to his great profit ; for it is to be imagined, that no small benefit could arise from the ferrying over footmen, horsemen, all manner of cattle, all market folks that came with provisions to the City, strangers and others. But chapbook 'John and his Mistress', Pepys Penny Merriments, I 35, was published by J.

We'll drink it out of the gallon, my boys, Here's a health to the barley-mow! Oft reprinted in 18th century, with at least three imitations. The act of your song being reinterpreted to be about this awful, awful year is not something I think any artists would be necessarily pleased as punch to see happen to their music — but it can be a lateral move all the same. The track also thrives from its head bobbing Elvis Costello-ey keyboard parts that is further benefited from having a singer who tackles the track with a cockeyed Mick Jagger affectation.

Ancient Poems, Ballads and Songs of England by Robert Bell

The gallant that dresses fine, And drinks his bottles of wine, Were he to be tried, his feathers of pride, Which deck and adorn his back, Are tailors' and mercers', and other men dressers, For which they do dun them now.

And afterward, in the winter, ensued a sudden frost ; whereby the great streams were congealed in such a manner that they could draw two hundred horsemen and carriages over them ; whilst at their thawing, many bridges, both of wood and stone, were borne down, and divers water mills were broken up and carried away! The face, which was painted exactly to resemble the life, was uncovered, and looking towards Heaven ; and on the bed lay a covering of red silk beaten with gold. It gives the whole ordeal some extra personality. In brackets are listed other copies for which I have no information on one or more of the previous items.
