From Yasashii Nihongo in non

Thus, Finkelstein has this to say; When one group of people with a particular form of impairment such as hearing impairment see themselves as fitting into the normal range for example their language is oppressed but they are not disabled while a the same time they view people who have different impairments as disabled, they are attributing medical labels to others in exactly the same way that they reject such labels for themselves. I thank librarians for their help particular through inter-library loans.
