Competing interests: The authors have declared that no competing interests exist. One alternative is that individuals high in primary psychopathy specifically leverage opportunities to assess and manipulate new acquaintances by controlling conversations and gleaning useful information about them, that is, they use conversation as a means for exploitation, a pattern consistent with the pursuit of status through dominance. Current DSM-IV diagnostic criteria focus on the behavioral manifestation of APD, such as convictions and incarcerations, and ignore emotional, interpersonal and personality-related aspects used in the identification of psychopaths.

Then Dongshik brings some friends over, and suddenly Inwoo realises what he's missing locking eyes with the man who looks so much like the fluffy-haired writer he'd fallen in love with. One mechanism by which this could occur is contempt experienced by higher status individuals toward those perceived to be of lower status, and this could drive social disengagement — perceiving their lower-status compatriots as not meriting their attention, and having little of value to offer in the way of relationship opportunities, high-status individuals may simply remain disdainfully quiet.
