Taira Masakado

The Jōhei-Tengyō Rebellion Beginning of hostilities 931-936 Disagreement exists about the exact cause of Masakado's rebellion.

Taira no Masakado

Tasuku was the eldest son of Minamoto Mamoru, a mighty warrior and government official in Hitachi. In retaliation, Masakado then burned and ransacked the houses of Tasuku's supporters across southwestern Hitachi.

Taira Masakado

Whatever his intentions, he eventually attacked and occupied the seat of the provincial government, and by that action crossed the proverbial line. Not much is known of Masakado's birth and early life due to lack of written evidence.

Taira no Masakado

The woman's brothers eventually allowed them to escape back to Masakado. Early in 938 however, Masakado received a second summons from the Council of State to question him on another dispute with his cousin Sadamori.

Taira Masakado

Meanwhile, Masakado managed to obtain a warrant issued by the Council of State authorising him to arrest Yoshikane, Mamoru, Sadamori and others. Surprisingly, Masakado repelled Yoshikane, killing more than half of his men. Thus, though in actual terms he was hardly more than a minor rebel who only briefly defied central authorities, he has nonetheless become an incredibly well-known figure, and has even become the subject of religious worship.
