Preventing AIDS: Theories and Methods of Behavioral Interventions

For example, if the aim of an intervention is to reduce sexual risk taking behaviours among young heterosexual women, the choice of outcome measures is not necessarily clear.

Preventing AIDS: A Sourcebook for Behavioral Interventions

Societal efforts designed to control the spread of AIDS have centered mainly on informing the public about how the human immunodeficiency virus HIV is transmitted and how to safeguard against such infection.

Cognitive Behavioral Stress Management and Secondary Prevention in HIV/AIDS

The first dimension focuses on whether health promotion aims to affect the individual's actions or to modify the environment material or social within which they live. Similarly, the enormous and important efforts to develop rapid and reliable diagnostic and treatment methods for sexually transmitted diseases helped divert attention away from the crucial issues of sexual practice.

Behavioural interventions to prevent HIV infection: rapid evolution, increasing rigour, moderate success

It should be noted that while rural communities can still implement this intervention, CDC is no longer providing funding or training and technical assistance for Sister to Sister projects at this time. When viewed through a social class lens, privilege, power and control are emphasized. American Journal of Public Health, 81, 1335—1338.

HIV prevention for South African youth: which interventions work? A systematic review of current evidence

KFF develops and runs its own research and communications programs, often in partnership with outside organizations. Moreover, there is a major difference between possessing self-regulative skills and being able to use them effectively and consistently under difficult circumstances. The application of other theories, such as the theory of planned behaviour, has been extensively investigated.

Behavioral Interventions for Prevention and Control of Sexually Transmitted Diseases

Use of formative research Theories can offer general guidance concerning factors addressed by interventions, but there are other aspects they cannot inform

AIDS and Behavior

This development is characterized by increasing rigour and moderate success. This requires minimising the possibility that such an association reflects the effects of some unacknowledged factor i.
