A circular ceramic basin made in 1990 north of the Old City of Jerusalem (the Third Wall) that were unearthed archaeological remains attributed to the fringes of one of four large monastic complexes of the Late Byzantine and Umayyad periods which were excavated in that area in the year A.D. 1987. The basin is made of clay and has a diameter of 15 cm. It is decorated with a rim mostly dated to the Late Byzantine and Umayyad periods (6th and 8th centuries). The rim is decorated with a series of small circular depressions (knobs) around the edge. Below this panel there are remains of fringes of oval or thumb impressions (fig. 1). In its profile and mouth decoration, this basin is clearly re-
