Group Learning

It can tell us a lot about the relationships in the group — and about what we might need to be working on with the group. They stay focused on the task and help others to do so too.

Using Roles in Group Work

One approach is to begin by brainstorming and then go around the group in a more structured way asking each person to add to the list. All contributions are listened to carefully, and strong points acknowledged.

Facilitating learning and change in groups and group sessions

It is to that we now turn. Receiving feedback requires listening well, asking for clarification if the comment is unclear, and being open to change and other ideas. But no one had extended those studies to study groups outside the classroom.

Group Learning

The students would start talking about the psychology experiments that were in the lecture and they would talk through it for a while and get to a point where everyone agreed about what the experiment was about. Can we agree on a time limit and then go on? Even though time is scarce and you may have a big project ahead of you, groups may take some time to settle in to work. For group learning to be effective, the students need to practice team building skills and learn to be accountable to their group as well as themselves.

Group Work

Such intervention may well be seen by some in a group as favouring one side or another. Which role do you prefer and why? Alternatively, criteria for a successful plan can be listed, and different alternatives can be voted on based on the criteria, one by one. While the potential learning benefits of group work are significant, simply assigning group work is no guarantee that these goals will be achieved.

Cooperative Learning: Teaching Strategy (Grades K

Other Highly Adaptable Roles to Consider You can adapt roles for different kinds of group tasks. Why are they working together? There are lots of ways of thinking about what it is important to attend to — but here I want to use a simple model: EFFECT.
