All selected candidates will, therefore, undergo rigorous reference and background checks. In Paris, countries from around the world endorsed the , a more comprehensive attempt to change the way donor and developing countries do business together, based on principles of partnership.

What is Sustainable Development and Why Does it Matter?

Given their critical role in infrastructure development, they can have significant effects and influence over financial flows to projects. We further recognize the need to assist developing countries in ensuring long-term debt sustainability through coordinated policies aimed at fostering debt financing, debt relief and debt restructuring, as appropriate. Developed countries should work in partnership with developing countries to help develop, adopt and implement effective strategies to achieve sustainable development.
