Placed under its control were the Midwest Committee, the Washington Committee, the Committee on Religious Work in the Canal Zone, and the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains. An alliance with Great Britain and France might have deterred Hitler from starting the war, and thus given the Soviet Union a considerable amount of time to prepare. Thus in 1938 a new Reich Defence Law had been drafted with the object of concentrating responsibility, in the event of war, in the hands of Frick as Plenipotentiary-General for the Reich Administration, Schacht later Funk as Plenipotentiary-General for Economy, and Keitel as Chief of the Oberkommando der Wehrmacht OKW.
