Those who escaped such fates made their way north and became the sixth nation of the Iroquois League.

New Voices From the Longhouse by Joseph Bruchac

CHILDREARING Children were valued among the Iroquois; because of the matrilineal society, daughters were somewhat more prized than sons. With medieval books of hours sitting alongside contemporary paperback novels, the choice is wonderfully varied, from Leonardo da Vinci to Sir Eduardo Paolozzi, Joan of Arc to Judge Dredd, Aesop to Charles Dickens, and Babar the Elephant to Ian Fleming.

Much of his writing draws on that land and his Abenaki ancestry. But this drive that forces man to express himself in rythmical patterns has its ultimate source in psychic needs, for example the need of spiritual ingestion and proper organization of all the multiform perceptions and impressions rushing for ever upon the individual from without and within, especially during his formative years.
