Characterization of cocoa production, income diversification and shade tree management along a climate gradient in Ghana

Influences of shading and fertilization on on-farm yields of cocoa in Ghana.

BUSAC FUND

They also revealed that an increase in educational level, maize farming experience, extension contact as well as uses of fertilizer and improved seeds would increase the technical efficiency of maize producers in Ghana. There were significant differences in cocoa productivity as one moves from the wet to the dry regions with the wet and mid regions having high cocoa yields compared to the dry region.

Welfare impact of pesticides management practices among smallholder cocoa farmers in Ghana

Value chain analysis benefits the rural poor, who are mostly women, to the greatest possible extent or, at least, does not worsen their position relative to other demographic groups. This could be explained by the fact that other alternative pest control methods or technologies may not be readily available, hence, educated farmers would have no option than to use pesticide. Cashew exports earned the country USD 211,328,000 in 2015.
