Sir Len Hutton: 'The Greatest Opening Batsman I've Ever Seen'

He reached 100 centuries in 619 innings, the lowest ratio by an Englishman, and of his eventual total of 129 hundreds, eleven exceeded 200. Hutton scored 2,049 runs at an average of 56.

The Cricket Trouser.

In the final two Tests, Hutton scored 104 and 86 and his bowlers dominated the Indian batsmen. The decision generated considerable acrimony, but surprised and pleased the Australians, who felt Hutton was their most formidable opponent with the bat.

Sir Len Hutton: 'The Greatest Opening Batsman I've Ever Seen'

In 1941 Hutton injured his left arm so badly in a gymnasium during commando training that three bone grafts were needed to repair the damage done by the compound fracture.

From the Vault: The death of a master

The showpiece match of the season was England against the Dominions at Lord's, but Hutton was prevented from appearing by his commitments to Pudsey. He had to decline the offer of the captaincy for all five Tests against South Africa in 1955, owing to continued ill health, and early in 1956 he announced his retirement.

The Cricket Trouser.

Having been put into bat by Hassett, the first time an Australian captain had fielded first against England since 1909, Hutton was bowled second ball by a from Lindwall. Both captains employed time-wasting tactics in the match, and used negative bowling outside.
