The aesthetics of violence in contemporary media / Gwyn Symonds

Many sports are combative, even if not as overtly as football and fencing. This is one of the most critical issues of public health and our social well-being. When art romanticizes, idealizes, or glorifies violence, does it mean that it is being used to sanitize and justify such acts? The aesthetic enjoyment of violence The aesthetic enjoyment of violent spectacles may seem sadistic; yet, as we have seen, it has a long history.

Most self-involving video games contain some violent content, even those for children. Symonds uses existing studies for the empirical audience reception data, together with discussions of the different representations of violence to look at violence in the media as an art form in of itself. For questions of aesthetic appreciation are not only about the distinctive experience of art and nature eo ipso: appreciative practice also carries moral implications and social consequences.
