Research on the Cultural connections between Tibetans and Mongols, which probably explains much of the tribal system of nomadic Tibet, which seems to have been ruled and structured by the Mongols from 1630s to 1720s, and whose systems were largely preserved by the Mongol and Manchu servants of the Qing court who were directed to manage relations with these peoples first through the Xining Amban, later through the Lhasa Amban; in Sichuan, more control over Tibetans fell to the Chengdu based governor-general and his administration there, which seems to explain the larger role of the tusi system in eastern Kham.
