The accommodation necessary varies in size and arrangement according to the extent of the farm, the nature of the principal crops, and the system of management pursued. The average temperature of the bodies of our cattle is about 100° F, or 40° F higher than the ordinary temperature of the atmosphere. It is usually found that farm buildings of moderate extent come together most conveniently in the form of three sides of a square or parallelogram

The air being so much colder than the body, must constantly draw from its heat and tend to lower its temperature.

Farm buildings: a practical treatise/Homestead or steading

The class of building, the material used, local circumstances, as well as the extent of the farm and the value of the land, all tend to disturb calculation. On a fattening farm, prominence must be given to boxes and covered yards, and to the arrangements for preparing food. When the outlay is made a rent-charge to be paid by the tenant, it is assumed to be paid by the land.

Too much stress cannot be put upon this point, and it does not apply merely to pure-bred stock, for in all cases it is absolute economy of food. Thus in a dairy farm, the cow-house and the dairy offices are the chief feature.
