The main function of the Notes in a textbook of this sort is to supplement the brevity or deficiencies of the text, partly by giving references to the sources of information, partly by referring to other books, where the points in question are more fully discussed; sometimes also by sounding a warning note that the statement in the text is very disputable, by citing objections to it or giving alternative theories; and occasionally by discussing points in detail when they are not too intricate, or when it was impossible to give a reference to any adequate discussion of them elsewhere.
